EDITORIAL

Professor Jean-Jacques ELEDJAM, President of the French Red Cross

Adaptation to climate change is not only tomorrow’s challenge. The health consequences of climate change are already visible in several different forms, either on mental health, on migrations, on ecosystems or on food security. Climate change already influences all of these areas, and will continue even more in the future.

Here we are, 100 years later, meeting at the very place in which the idea of the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies was born. It has become today the largest humanitarian movement in the whole world. At the end of the war, in 1919, its creation was answering the needs of a greater cooperation in humanitarian action. 100 years later, our focus is once again about cooperation when addressing the challenges of climate change.

During two days, we will talk about adaptation. Climate change directly affects our health and our environment, as well as the social determinants of health. Its impacts are multiple, complex and interdependent and therefore require to be understood in order to anticipate risks and adapt our response.

During two days, we will be able to discuss with speakers coming from all continents to share their experiences and expertise. All of them have a singular background, ranging from the expert to the actor in the field, including representatives of future generations, mayors or innovators. There is no doubt that these discussions will be fruitful for every one of us.

This World Conference’s purpose is to create a time for exchange and sharing, but also as a milestone of mobilization. We are inventing the first «Humanitarian COP» here and these days are just a beginning: everyone has a role to play and the involvement of everybody is the most essential condition to meet the greatest public health challenge of the 21st century!

I wish every one of you to find ideas, answers, inspirations and momentum here. May you all enjoy this conference.

DONATE YOUR MILES TO SUPPORT THE ACTIONS OF THE FRENCH RED CROSS!

Thanks to Flying Blue, Air France's frequent flyer programme, we can offset the carbon footprint of the air travel generated by the conference by donating your miles to the French Red Cross. You will be able to support actions that are close to your heart and help vulnerable people who suffer the direct or indirect effects of climate change on their health (famines caused by lower agricultural yields, the spread of parasitic or infectious diseases, injuries related to accidents during hurricanes, etc.).

For example, Air France recently donated 3.3 million miles to the French Red Cross in Southern Africa following the devastation caused by Cyclone IDAI in Malawi, Mozambique and Zimbabwe on 14 April 2019.

To donate your miles, go to: https://www.flyingblue.fr/fr/donation/charities

THE CSR STRATEGY OF THE FRENCH RED CROSS

Its historical mission, centred on the dignity, autonomy and resilience of individuals, as well as its membership in an internationally recognized humanitarian movement, give the French Red Cross a very special responsibility towards all those whom it has supported for 150 years throughout their lives and who trust its emblem.

Because they are active in all areas of crisis, the French Red Cross actors are often the first to witness the direct or indirect consequences of environmental degradation, climate change, increased health risks, or the increase in inequality and precariousness of a growing number of people...

Preventing the occurrence of these crises means positioning itself as an irreproachable and exemplary actor, attentive to promoting the sustainable development of its activities, in other words, taking care of both people and their environment, by combining social progress, respect for the environment, territorial anchoring and economic performance.

To this end, the French Red Cross has adopted a Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) strategy, validated in spring 2018, which sets common guidelines and objectives for the coming years. Each group entity is expected to develop them into action plans specific to its activity. A dedicated working group has been set up, for example, to reduce the environmental impact of international humanitarian activities.

In order to reduce its ecological footprint as much as possible, the French Red Cross has placed this world conference under the banner of sustainable development.

No distribution of goodies, therefore, nor any printed program: you can consult the latter on the dedicated website (https://worldconference.croix-rouge.fr) or on the panels in situ.

The ecological badges that will identify you are made from mineral paper (without bleaching agent) and cords made from recycled plastic bottles.

Don't forget to give them back to us at the end of the conference: badges will be recycled and cords reused at future Red Cross events!
